Be a wise monkey

If you're looking for a gift, which is both unique and useful, a session with financial coach Simonne Gnessen could be just the present you're looking for.

Simonne's company, Wise Monkey Financial Coaching, now offers gift vouchers for its range of services. So if you know someone who has problems managing their money, or could simply do with some support in making a financial decision, spending some of yours could help them save some of theirs.

Wise Monkey Financial Coaching offers no-catch, product-free advice on anything from savings and investments to everyday living.

Gift vouchers are available for as little or as much as you like – just £10 towards the cost of a meeting, or the price of a single consultation or a series of meetings.

Financial coach, Simonne Gnessen, says:

"My goal is to demystify the world of finance, relieve you of stress relating to your financial worries and help you use your financial resources effectively so that you can get more out of life."

Notes to editors:

Simonne Gnessen established Wise Monkey Financial Coaching in March 2002 after working as an independent financial adviser for 10 years. She is professionally qualified with a wide range of technical knowledge.

Wise Monkey Financial Coaching offers a service which is affordable to most people, not just those with money to invest.

Financial coaching empowers people to take control of their own finances. It is different to financial advice. Coaching focuses on helping you understand your own finances and provides support and insight towards meeting your financial goals. And while it will often guide you towards the type of financial product that you need to satisfy your goals it doesn't involve specific product recommendations. The service can be used to complement independent financial advice.

Wise Monkey Financial Coaching won't sell you any financial products. The service is much less expensive than fee-based independent financial advice: a one-hour meeting costs from £55.
